Garden of STEAM transforms Learning Center

An unused, dull area at the Kramer Learning Center came alive this past summer in a new outdoor classroom thanks to the dedicated staff at the preschool. It began literally and figuratively with a seed.

The outdoor classroom is the cornerstone of the program's STEAM (Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts and Mathematics) initiative and was the handiwork and brainchild of Jane O'Brien, Senior Psychologist and Social Work Supervisor.

The classroom offers preschool children an opportunity to learn about STEAM concepts as they connect to the world around them. In the outdoor space, learning to count takes on a different look as children practice counting real objects they find in the garden.

"We wanted to offer students an innovative and progressive way to learn," said Rose Scammell, Senior Administrator at the Kramer Learning Center.

"We know that children learn best when they are presented with learning opportunities in a variety of multisensory learning environments. This garden offers children that opportunity and so much more."

Ms. O'Brien, a gardening enthusiast, put in long hours well after her work shift had ended at the school, designing, tending to the garden and setting up activities. When the lack of rain threatened the budding garden over the summer, Ms. O'Brien came every weekend to water the plantings. Her labor of love paid off as the STEAM garden was embraced by the children and teachers at Kramer.

The new school year brought a new outdoor classroom and new sensory room to ACLD's Kramer Learning Center.
